“ Joyce was my mother-in-law for just shy of 53 years. And a wonderful mother-in-law she was: supportive, friendly, fun, kind and never interfering with my relationship with her daughter Pam. Yes, she was the opposite of the stereotypical mother-in-law. Even as her memory began to fade a couple years ago, she still recalled the first meal she served to me five decades earlier: pork chops. I asked Pam recently why her mom would remember that relatively insignificant detail. Pam said her mom remembered because it was important for her to make a good impression, and she was disappointed that the pork chops were burned. I recall the meal well: The pork chops were not burned as far as I was concerned, and the entire meal was nothing short of outstanding. She was an irreplaceable part of my life. And I have lots of great memories to prove it. -- Tom Hammill
