“ I met Shaun at UWM. Not only did we work together at the union, we also became close friends, and shared classes together including plenty of Photography/Fine Art. We were pretty high on ourselves and we got in way over our heads taking a 600 level philosophy class together - after that we stuck with art. True story - I remember Shaun flat out telling off an entire figure drawing class during a critique session that all their work "sucked" - something the instructor secretly agreed with after class.

Shaun always had interesting insights on life and a fantastic sense of humor. He loved the pursuit of new music, culture, and knowledge. We enjoyed listening to music together, and one album in particular The Pleasure Principle at full volume to the chagrin of his roommates. We had some good laughs. We saw so many shows at the Globe, the Unicorn, house shows, etc. Hours were spent debating and studying the performances of some amazing bands.

Shaun was an exceptionally friendly person and seemed to get along with everyone. He was always "real" to me - he wasn't shy to present his true colors the minute you met him. If he was unhappy or not, he was sure to let you know.

That was a long time ago and although we drifted apart through the years, I have so many fond memories of him. Great human being. My condolences to Diane and Aidan. I'm truly sorry. He will be missed.
